Lettuce supplies are improving as the harvest continues to shift north in California. Last week, iceberg lettuce shipment from California rose 5.1% from the previous week and were 6% better than the same week last year. Lettuce supplies should remain adequate in the near term which could keep downward pressure on the markets. Avocado prices are on the decline as well as the volumes continue to improve from Mexico. Still, U.S. avocado imports remain below last year which could temper any further downside movement in the markets.
