Chicken output for the last week of 2017 fell 13% from the previous week due to the holiday but was 3.8% larger than the same week the prior year. The six-week total of chicken production was 3.5% better than 2016. Recent data suggests that year-over-year chicken output expansion could slow in the near term. The six-week moving average for chick-placements was just 1.1% better than last year. U.S. chicken exports during November were 2.2% bigger than the previous year and the largest for the month since 2013. The USDA is forecasting chicken exports this year to rise 3% which is likely to be supportive of the leg quarter and thigh markets.
