Kemp's Ice Cream Scooping Techniques

Proper ice cream scooping techniques are critical to the success or failure of an ice cream dipping store operation. It takes a little bit of practice and planning to dip ice cream from a 3 gallon container properly.

CIRCULAR SCOOPING: Scoop the ice cream in a circular pattern around the outside of the 3 gallon container. Using this practice versus stabbing into the middle of the tub with the scoop will keep the ice cream from having air deleted from the product and drying it out. It's also important to only allow the edge of the ice cream scoop to penetrate the ice cream about a 1/2 inch into the surface of the ice cream. This helps to reduce the compression of the ice cream which releases air from the ice cream and diminishes the ice cream quality.

COMPLETING THE SCOOP: Continue cutting in a circular pattern, rotating around the 3 gallon tub. When the dipper is full, turn the dipper under the ball of ice cream to round out, and lift up. Begin the next scoop where the last one left off. Continue scooping in a circular pattern, removing one layer of ice cream at a time. Never compress the ice cream.

WETTING THE SCOOP: Dip the scoop into fresh water and gently tap to remove excess water in between each scoop of ice cream. This helps glide the scoop in the ice cream. Too much water will form ice crystals in the ice cream.
